List of Outputs:

Total approved sum: €8,176.00

1 Geophysical surveys, prospections (Product)

01/04/2022–31/05/2022

Geophysical prospection is a non-destructive archaeological method, which is an important step before the beginning of the destructive archaeological research itself (excavation during the summer school of archaeology). The result of the measurement using an electromagnetic device in the field is a detailed plan of anomalies, which are located below the surface and indicate the destroyed remains of historic structures. Based on this output, it is possible to carry out targeted archaeological research. Geophysical prospection presents currently an integral part of archaeological research.

Direct target groups:

General public interested in the history of the studied region, professional public (research and heritage conservation experts), University students of archaeology, history and related disciplines, Secondary school students: 500

Selection/outreach: The results will be presented to both the general and the scientific public using the web application and scientific as well as scientifically popular articles. The potential audience will also be reached through information on social media and on the website.

Dissemination/promotion

The results of geophysical prospecting will be applied in the first step during the summer school of archaeology (participants will gain skills on how to work with the results from field research). The results will be presented on the project's online platforms as well as planned lectures for the public. They will also be incorporated into the upcoming web application.

Role of the applicant and project partners

The applicant and the partner will be in charge of the preparation of geophysical prospection in the territory of the ir respective countries. The applicant and the partner will be responsible for the preparation of administrative paperwork (agreements with landowners, etc.), for the processing of geodetic data (maps and the focus of the affected area in the field) and the subsequent provision of technical support directly during the implementation of the prospection.

2 Summer school of archaeology (Event–Public), Gbely, SK

13/06/2022–08/07/2022

The Summer School of Archaeology is an activity that integrates scientific research with educational activities. All participants will participate in individual work activities in the process of archaeological research. The summer school will consist of two basic parts, fieldwork (uncovering archaeological contexts directly at the archaeological site, documentation of finds, photographic documentation, geodetic survey) and post-excavation processing of finds at the archaeological base (cleaning, registration, crossing of botanical samples, processing of field documentation).

Direct target groups:

University students of archaeology, history and related disciplines, secondary school students: 15

Selection/outreach: Excavations are one of the practical subjects taken up by the students of archaeology. Our project will be presented at universities in the Czech Republic and Slovakia, based on which the students will participate in the excavations. The students from Comenius University, a partner of this project, will be selected primarily. The results will be presented on the project's online platforms. The summer school will therefore have an impact on a wide audience in Central Europe.

Dissemination/promotion

The results of archaeological research will be presented on online platforms and in the form of planned lectures for the general public. The research results will be further presented in the form of study published in an international scientific journal to the professional community and its modification in a popular science journal. The results will be incorporated into a web application.

Role of the applicant and project partners

Both the applicant and the partner will participate in the preparation of the summer school of archaeology. The primary role of the applicant will be to prepare the basis for fieldwork and to define the research strategy. Subsequently, the applicant will directly conduct the excavation. The participants will be accommodated at the archaeological base in Mikulčice and will participate in the post-excavation processing and its documentation at this base. The partner will primarily participate in the implementation of research in the field. The partner will implement educational activities directly by involving the participants of the summer school in field and documentation work. The partner will therefore manage the fieldwork and documentation at the archaeological site.
