the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a vision for the future of mental health care, which includes a commitment to improve the lives of people with mental health problems and to ensure that they are treated with dignity and respect.

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key principles for the future of mental health care, which include a commitment to improve the lives of people with mental health problems and to ensure that they are treated with dignity and respect.

the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (1994) has set out a vision of a new mental health service, one that is more effective, more efficient, more humane and more integrated with the rest of the health service.

One of the key elements of this vision is the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. This is a goal that has been shared by many people in the mental health service for many years. However, it is only in the last few years that it has become a priority for the government and the public.

The Department of Health (1994) has set out a vision of a new mental health service, one that is more effective, more efficient, more humane and more integrated with the rest of the health service. This vision is based on the following principles:

- The service should be based on the needs of the individual.
- The service should be based on the principles of recovery.
- The service should be based on the principles of partnership.
- The service should be based on the principles of equality.
