In the event your material is beyond economical repair, Safran Helicopter Engines may charge the tasks performed until evaluation (disassembly, cleaning, investigation/inspection). Depending on the condition of the material concerned, Safran Helicopter Engines may also propose one of the options below

- Return of engine parts/equipment in "as-is" condition after evaluation and disassembly
- Engine parts buy-back for a price covering the amount of work already carried out on the engine.

Material declared as non-repairable may be classified as scrap material.
"Scrap material" refers to materials which are not economically repairable due to their condition according to the Safran Helicopter Engines technical documentation.
Should this occur, the customer may choose to have the material scrapped and discarded on site or have it returned as scrap (Scrapping charges may apply).
