1 Winter School 2018 (Event-Public), Hejnice, CZ

27/01/2018-03/02/2018

The Winter School is a traditional conference for mathematicians working in diverse areas of set theory, topology and analysis. Research in these areas has a strong tradition in the Visegrád region. The meeting aims to encourage concrete collaboration across countries as well as disciplines. The format of the conference is tailored to this goal by providing plenty of space for face-to-face discussions as well as having a research track for work-in-progress talks. Complementary to this research track is a tutorial track where selected internationally renowned experts give introductory talks on a specific topic of current interest. Winter School in Abstract Analysis has been, from its founding in 1973, intended to be a meeting where mathematics was done, not merely listened to. Another feature of the school is its emphasis on collaboration. In the difficult circumstances of post '68 Czechoslovakian mathematics, it brought together people across boundaries. In the second year, it attracted participants from Poland and it quickly became international. The section devoted to topology and set theory meets every year since 1978. For the 2018 meeting, we have invited four experts; Leandro Aurichi (Universidade de São Paulo, Brazil), Joel David Hamkins (The City University of New York, USA), Jordi Lopez-Abad (IMJ-PRG, Université Paris Diderot, France), and Itay Neeman (University of California at Los Angeles, USA) who agreed to give tutorials on various research topics. These tutorials serve to introduce students to the "hot" topics in set theory/topology research while allowing more seasoned researchers in different areas to become up-to date on recent progress in fields outside their immediate focus. Each tutorial will consist of a series of three 50 minutes long lectures. In addition, there will be around 30 shorter talks in the research track, where participants present their most recent research. These talks are a great opportunity for students and young researchers to get a feel for what is being done, and for speakers to invite people to collaborate with them on a specific topic. We are also careful to provide enough time for discussions and personal interactions so that people can meet in small groups to discuss their research. These discussions often lead to further fruitful collaboration outlasting the duration of the school. The 5.5 days of scientific program will be complemented by one afternoon trip into the neighborhood of the conference venue, and the evening program is traditionally devoted to less formal discussions and social interactions. The conference venue, the historic building of the former Franciscan monastery in the small town of Hejnice greatly contributes to the spirit of the meeting. The remote location surrounded by mountains and beautiful nature is ideal for stimulating interaction on both professional and personal level. The meeting has a traditional waiver program, allowing the scientific committee to select outstanding students and researchers whose registration fee is waived. This allows the conference to attract excellent students and
